

How Green Is Your Process?

Csaba Szabo

The tutorial focuses on energy consumption of working software development processes, where each development phase plays a significant role. Considering FP, the energy is being consumed while problem analysis, constructing and evaluating the code as well. Main software tools used in the tutorial are related to energy consumption monitoring for selected operating systems and for evaluation. We will also look at the possibility to use these tools to measure how green are the produced programs.